Dear Mrs. Phillips,

Your letter of February 14th at hand. Thank you very much for the $5.00, and for your help on your father's family. Sorry to hear you have been ill, but trust this letter finds you feeling much better.

I am enclosing what I have on Wilson & Millicent Hunt, and their ancestry. We do indeed have an ancestral background that we can well be proud of. We are descended from no less than five noted Quaker ministers, namely: Isaac Pennington, of England; William Hunt; Richard Beeson (?); Ann (Matthews) Floyd Jessop; and Rachel (Wilson) Winslow Townsend Williams. Some genealogists say Richard Beeson was a minister, and some say he wasn't, so I have put a question mark after his name.

William Hunt, Jr., the minister, married Sarah Mills. Her father, John Mills, furnished supplies to the militia of N.C., S.C., and Va., during the Revolutionary War, so through him all descendants of William Hunt, Jr., are eligible for the D.A.R. and S.A.R. Would be glad to fill out your membership papers should you ever care to join. The regular fee for filling out such papers is $10.00 and $5.00, but I promise I won't charge that much.

The name Hunt undoubtedly originated in England. It is derived from Hunter, meaning a hunter, or one who hunts. Incidentally, we are also descended from the Hunter family.

It is interesting to note that Isaiah Hunt (your grt. grt. grandfather) was the son of a Quaker minister, the son-in-law of a Quaker minister, the brother of a Quaker minister, and the grt. grt. uncle of a Quaker minister! Isaiah's sister Margaret is the grt. grandmother of William Wade Hinshaw, noted opera singer, genealogist, etc. Isaiah's brother Nathan, noted Quaker minister of Guilford Co., N.C., was the founder of New Garden School, now Guilford College.

Practically all our ancestors, as given on the charts, were in-fluent members of the Society of Friends as far back as there were any. You and Mr. Phillips are both descended from the John Woolman who married Elizabeth Borton, as given on page 13. I believe John Woolman, the minister, mentions in his Journal of the passing of his cousin William Hunt.

My father and mother are both descended from the William Clayton, as given on page 14. (That makes my mother and my grandmother Johnson cousins in the 7th degree, so to speak.) Said William Clayton was acting Governor of Pennsylvania 1684-5 under William Penn.

The Mayflower lineage is fine, but it has not as yet been definitely proved that Thomas Winslow was a son of Joseph and Sarah (Lawrence) Winslow. It is very probable that he IS their son, but it just seems to be one of those things that cannot be proved.

Our descent from Charlemagne, William the Conqueror, and the two Magna Charta Barons is also very interesting. Isaiah Hunt wills one half of his "waggon" to one son and the other half to another son. An unusual procedure, to be sure. Those old wills are always so interesting. Cornelius Hunt, son of Jonathan (brother of Wilson) married Amanda Johnson, my grt. grt. aunt.

I am continually working on my genealogy; first on one line then on another. I aim to try to at least get a complete record of the grandchildren of Wilson and Millicent Hunt. Would love to pay you a visit but don't know when I could arrange it. Am returning to Ind. 1st of March. In the meantime, if I find anything new on our ancestry I will let you know. Hoping the enclosed is what is desired, I remain

Sincerely yours,

William Perry Johnson

HUNT

WILLIAM HUNT, A QUAKER OF THE OLDEN TIME.
by William A. Blair (A grt. grt. grandson.)

(Address delivered at unveiling of marker to William Hunt in New Garden Cemetery (Guilford Co., N.C.) October 20, 1935.)

It would be interesting and enlightening to trace William Hunt's family and forefathers through the generations preceding him, but it would lead us so far back into ancient history that, even if all the data were at hand, time, today, would not permit. Therefore we can but briefly recite a few incidents connected with this illustrious preacher, who was so suddenly, and seemingly prematurely, cut down in the very flush and freshness of his grand career and splendid manhood.

About the year 1700, William Hunt, father of William, to whom our attention today is directed, settled on Rancocas Creek, Burlington Co., N.J., near Philadelphia. His wife was Mary Woolman, sister of the father of illustrious John, whose works were included by President Eliot, of Harvard, in his "Five-foot Shelf", and of whom Charles Lamb, the great English essayist, wrote, "Get the writings of John Woolman by heart and love the early Quakers." Among the records of the "First Families of America", are found a number of references to William Hunt, Sr., and one says that he was "late of Bayberry and produced a certificate from Radner in Great Britain."

In this little Friends settlement in New Jersey, William Jr. was born in the year 1733, the youngest child. Soon after his birth the household moved over into Pennsylvania and a short while afterwards, in 1745, the father passed to his reward. An aunt in Maryland, a strict old fashioned Friend, but useful, loved and respected, virtually adopted the lad and took him into her home. This arrangement separated him from his first cousin, John Woolman, to whom he was devotedly attached, and who became such an eminent preacher, philanthropist, and author. However, this association was interestedly and lovingly renewed in later years.

William Hunt grew up under the finest and best of home, cultural, educational, and religious influence, and having at an early period felt a direct and impelling call to the ministry, began to preach quite regularly at the seemingly early and even premature age of 15. Before he was entirely grown he had become a part of the little "Friends settlement" around New Garden (North Carolina); purchased a farm about two miles in a northerly direction from where the Guilford College buildings now stand; married Sarah Mills at Cane Creek Meeting in 1753; and was recorded a minister there in 1754. Before he was 21 years of age, he received a minute to visit Friends and Friends Meetings in North Carolina and Virginia, and the mission seems to have been accomplished with great success, comfort, response, and satisfaction. Time does not permit mention of all his constant journeying, but in the next year we read of a minute liberating him for service among the Friends on the Pee Dee River, and in 1761 he was on an extended visit, including Yearly Meetings through this state (N.C.), Virginia, Maryland, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and other states to the north and west. In 1767 he was called again to the same field, extending now to Delaware, Nantucket, through the New England States, and elsewhere. Special mention is made of his visits to Maine. On these and other strenuous tours it is recorded that he held meetings almost, if not in every Friends Meeting house in America, in the churches of various other denominations, and in sundry other public places as well. Besides this, he seems to have been in demand to settle disagreements and misunderstandings of various kinds. For instance, in Rhode Island, a serious difficulty had arisen in regard to certain lands and their boundaries. William Hunt brought the parties together and kept them together from early morn to late at night, and would not let them go until the entire matter was satisfactorily and permanently settled.

Eloquent, graceful, cultured, blessed with wonderful voice and oratorical powers, it is interesting to note how carefully he read and studied; how he committed to memory quotations he might want to use in discourse, and how, upon occasions, he was so resolved and determined on self-improvement and self-training that it seemed he wanted to find and correct every fault, mannerism, failing and defect. Quaintly he wrote concerning one of these self-inspections, -- "I could not find I stood condemned for anything, unless it was for speaking too fast and too loud, to which I was incident." He was something of a psychopath, in the best sense of the word, but along with mystic gift and power his mind was always sane, safe and sensible. Many remarkable incidents in his career could be cited, but one example must suffice: His friend John Churcham, the noted Philadelphia preacher, was very ill. The doctors, nurses, family and friends believed there was no hope for his recovery, but William Hunt felt called upon to go visit him again and was admitted to the room. For a while he sat in silent, solemn pause and then announced that it had risen in his heart to say that he could recover, for the Lord yet had work for him to do, and added that he felt sure "he must surmount the wave and perform some other service for the truth." To the surprise and astonishment of everybody, John Churcham at once, as they say, "took a turn for the better" and lived and served for fourteen years thereafter.

Many stories are told of his great ability to deal with and influence his fellows, of his wonderful tact and patience, but Joseph Walton, of Philadelphia, relates an incident so different from the ones to which we are accustomed that it seems worth repeating; -- Upon one occasion while sitting in sweet and solemn silence before beginning to preach, he noticed that a few Friends were sleeping. He arose to speak, stood quietly for a moment and then "stamped loudly upon the floor three times", before he began. It is said that someone suggested that nobody could or would want to sleep when William Hunt was speaking.

In 1770 he made another visit through the North and East, and sailed for Europe under a deep concern that had weighed upon his mind and heart for many months. He remained abroad about two years until his sad, untimely death on September 9, 1772, before he had quite reached the age of nine and thirty years. Throughout England, Scotland, and Ireland, he had constantly travelled, visited and preached, attended the Yearly Meeting in London in 1772, thence hastened on to his work on the continent, and finally to the field in Holland which had continually beckoned him. Finishing his work there with marked success, he embarked for Scarborough whose hospitable harbor lies high upon the English coast some two hundred miles from London. But, contrary winds and wild rough waves caused the vessel to put in at Shields, still further to the North, where a landing was made on August 25, 1772. He attended the Meeting there on the 26th, pressed on to New-Castle-upon-the-Tyne, not far away, and preached at the services there on the 27th. When asked how long it would be possible for him to remain in that section of the country, he answered, "My coming here seemed to be providential, and when I am enclosed, and see no further." An epidemic of small pox had broken out in Holland as well as in England, and it is said that the priests and ministers of the different churches hesitated to go to the bedsides of those who were ill and even dying, and that some of them actually fled from infected areas. William Hunt felt it a duty and a privilege freely to give his ministrations to the bodies, and spiritual aid and comfort to the souls of those afflicted, whether or not members of the Society of Friends. Somehow, somewhere, he had contracted the disease, dreaded then far more than it is today, and the attack was fatal. Strange to say, his cousin, John Woolman, who was also on a religious visit to England, likewise fell a victim to the same disease and died a short time afterward.

The English report of William Hunt's passing is as follows: - "A little before he died he said, triumphantly, 'Friends, truth is over all.'" So in great peace departed this life, the 9th day of the ninth Month, 1772, and was interred in Friends burying ground in New-Castle-upon-the-Tyne, the 11th of the same month, accompanied by many Friends, upon which occasion a solemn meeting was held, and divers testimonies borne to the truth, in the service of which he lived and died, an example to many brethren. A minister 24 years. His remains still lie there undisturbed and his resting place marked by a plain but pleasing monument. Sometime, perhaps, this may be replaced.

During his last illness he was thinking of his devoted wife and beloved children, and it is recorded that he remarked to a friend, "It will be a sore trial to my companion if I am now removed," and then gave tender, touching messages of love, counsel and advice to be transmitted across the Atlantic in case he should not recover. Much might be said of his fine, full, busy, active life, of the wonderful experiences through which he passed, and of the marvel of his talent enabling him to travel so constantly and yet maintain and educate his family. But his wife was a woman of great intelligence, business ability, and untiring energy, and his eight children, the third one of whom, Nathan, was the Founder of New Garden School, - all joined in helping the mother and in carrying on. It is interesting to know that the manuscript journal with letters of William Hunt is now deposited in the library of Haverford College, having been loaned to the institution by George Hunt, of Philadelphia, a four times great grandson. It was from these documents that a large part of the material for the first portion of the volume "Memoirs of William and Nathan Hunt" (by Enoch Lewis, Editor of Friends Review) published in Philadelphia in 1858, was gleaned and taken. The New Castle Monthly Meeting of Great Britain published a "Testimony," as they call it, and I have taken at random a few scattered extracts: - "Exemplary and uniform in conduct; - of weighty deportment; - conversation grave instructive, seasoned with love and sweetness which rendered his company both profitable and desirable; - his ministry living and powerful, deep and searching, - a man of sound judgment, quiet apprehension, and deep in religious experience; - an elder and father in the church, worthy of double honor."

Thomas Priestman, the celebrated English Friend, at the time of William Hunt's death, declared "The loss seems unspeakable that the church has sustained by being deprived of such a member, seemingly one of the greatest in our Society according to my apprehension."

Of him, Amos Kersey wrote in 1799: - "He was of a reddish fair complexion, his countenance serious, composed and solid; of middle sized stature and pretty big bodied; moderate in meat and drink; - diligent in business, fervent in spirit, valiant for the truth; - immovable as a rock; - deep in divine knowledge, - plain and powerful in preaching; - fervent in prayer; - quick in discerning; - discreet in keeping counsel. Graceful he was in countenance, grave in gesture, courteous in conversation; - weighty in communication, instructive in discourse, free from affectation in speech or carriage; - very tender, compassionate and pitiful he was to all who were under any sort of affliction, full of brotherly love full of fatherly care. He lived and died the servant of the Lord.
